Chapter 4 – Access Management

Access Management Defined

Access Management is an efficient way of dealing with the problems associated with traffic congestion and safety caused by motorists turning at driveways and intersections. Congestion and the threat of accidents becomes greater as the number of driveways and intersections increases and the distance between them decreases.

Typical goals of access management include:

- Improving public safety by reducing the number of accidents.
- Improving the corridor by reducing vehicle conflicts, effectively increasing mobility and decreasing delay.
- Providing safe access to businesses and properties.
- Maximizing the efficiency of existing and proposed roads.

All highways and roads serve traffic mobility, land access, or a combination of both. The primary function of freeways is to serve mobility, so they have strict access control requirements. Local streets are primarily designed for lower traffic volumes and speeds to provide access to properties. Arterial and collector roads fall in between these extremes and require the balance of access vs. mobility.

Many of the best practices from around the country are presented in the Transportation Research Board Access Management Manual (TRB Manual). The TRB Manual is used as a master reference in this report because it focuses many of the ideas and practices into one document. Many of these practices will be highlighted and recommendations tailored to the needs of the City of Gahanna.

Importance and Benefits of Access Management

Access management techniques are an important part of maintaining the balance between traffic operations and access. Figure 7 is a common visual depiction of the relationship between traffic operations and access. Higher level roadways, such as freeways, have more access restrictions. Lower level roadways, such as local subdivision streets, have higher levels of access.

Figure 7
Mobility versus Land Access

Source: AASHTO Geometric Design of Highways and Streets, 2004

Providing the appropriate level of access by roadway type allows agencies to extend the usable "life" of the roadway, reduce traffic congestion and improve safety. Access management benefits all transportation system users and property owners in the area. The following list highlights access management benefits to various groups of stakeholders:

- Drivers
- Cyclists
- Pedestrians
- Local business
- Residents
- Cities

Problems in Areas with Poor Access Management

Roadway systems without access management typically have increased congestion and crashes at intersections and roadway segments. These areas typically have higher levels of traffic congestion associated with close driveway spacing and often high volume generators of traffic. While many businesses equate multiple driveway access points with more customers, surveys have found that customers often avoid the high congestion areas. Some of the negative impacts to a city when access is not well managed:

- Increases in crashes at driveways and intersections.
- More hazardous conditions for pedestrians and cyclists.
- Decreases in roadway and intersection capacity.
- Increases in cut-through traffic on local roads as drivers avoid arterial congestion.
- Difficulty entering and exiting area businesses due to close concentration of drives mixed with arterial traffic.

Typically, sections of roadway experience deteriorating access over time as businesses move to newer developments. Close driveway spacing and inadequate width (or depth) of driveways contribute to the access problems. Commercial strip areas can easily become areas with poor access management as fast-food and other quick turnover businesses become common.

Methods to Establish Access Management Policies

Access management is practiced by municipal governments, counties, and state agencies. While the implementation varies by agency, the focus is on planning, regulatory and design strategies. The TRB Manual provides some of the following methods to establish access management:

- Adopt community-wide policies, directives and/or guidelines.
- Develop local access management regulations and ordinances.
- Require acquisition of access rights, often an expensive alternative.
- Improve/enhance land development regulations.
- Foster development review and impacts assessment (agencies often assess a fee to the developer to build turn lanes or other improvements).
- Establish geometric design criteria for drives and intersections.

Agencies can develop area wide or corridor access management plans and programs. These are typically based on roadway classification based on function. Gahanna has the opportunity to establish this based on the thoroughfare plan roadway network. Options for access management techniques and policies for the City of Gahanna will be detailed in later sections of this report.

Access Management Guidelines

Managing access in a community requires a partnership between planning, zoning, and engineering departments. The engineering department also needs to maintain a relationship with the local MPO to be aware of planning and project development on a regional level that affects City operations.

Local access management programs can develop standards and criteria to be applied based on the roadway classification and land uses. The following types of standards can be developed as criteria to be met in an engineering department review:

- Distance between intersections.
- Traffic signal spacing.
- Minimum driveway spacing and depth of drive.
- Number of drives per property.
- Requirement for constructing turn lanes.

Local agencies are encouraged to establish an internal working group that may consist of planning, zoning, engineering, citizens and other representatives who will evaluate current access practices and recommend future plans for legislation. This committee could meet on an annual or bi-annual basis to determine if the City needs to update the access review process.

Access Management Programs

Most cities are constantly evaluating the need for access to properties versus the need for roadway mobility. Proper coordination between land uses and roadway networks provide mobility and access to business, commercial, retail and residential areas. Some of the typical practices that can be applied include:

- Specific definition of access by roadway classification.
- Limit direct access to high volume roadways.
- Define intersection hierarchy (similar to roadway classification).
- Define and protect the intersection functional area.
- Minimize the number of conflict points.
- Provide turn lanes and refuges to minimize conflicts with through traffic.
- Construct medians in select corridors to manage access and minimize conflicts.
- Provide an overall street network that supports mobility and access.

All of these items are highlighted in a separate report titled City of Gahanna Access Management Guidelines.

City of Gahanna Access Management Criteria

The City of Gahanna has a full range of roadway classifications within the area to provide both regional and local access. All access to the Interstate system is located on the west and southwest side of the City. The travel pattern for traffic accessing the regional highway system focuses on the major arterials, such as Hamilton Road, Granville Street and Morse Road. These roadways also serve local access within Gahanna and neighboring communities.

The recommended City of Gahanna Access Management Criteria is defined and included in a separate report titled Access Management Guidelines for the following roadways:

- Major Arterials.
- Minor Arterials.
- Collector Roads.
- Local Roads (mostly in residential areas).

Corridor Access Management Tools

Several corridor specific applications were described in this report as possible access management tools. The following are recommended for future implementation in the City of Gahanna.

- Median installation on sections of Granville Street and Hamilton Road.
- Two-way left turn lanes – continue installation on minor arterials and collectors as warranted.
- Backage Roads – potential installation on parts of Granville Street and Hamilton Road. This would need to be determined based on future property redevelopments.

Intersection and Driveway Access Management Tools

Several intersection and driveway applications were described in this report as possible access management tools. The following are recommended for future implementation in the City of Gahanna.

- Drive placement – review placement of intersection and drives to minimize conflicts between left turns.
- Install left or right turn lanes as warranted based on ODOT and City criteria (minimum storage length 100 feet, plus minimum approach taper of 50 feet, and minimum deceleration taper of 50 feet).

The following definitions are presented for each classification of roadway in the Gahanna Thoroughfare Plan network. The standard industry definitions have been referenced with information from the Ohio Department of Transportation and MORPC:

Interstate Highways have full access control and limited points of entry at interchanges. The speed limits on the area Interstates (I-270 and I-670) are 65 MPH. Gahanna has interchanges at Morse Road, Easton Way, US 62 and Hamilton Road accessing both highways.

Major arterials typically serve major activity centers with higher traffic volumes and longer trips. They serve travel within the Gahanna area and connect to regional roadway networks. Major arterials are recommended to minimize access to promote a higher level of mobility. They also provide a critical connection to minor arterials and collector routes. Major arterials will vary in width according to traffic volume and often have more than four through lanes (with turn lanes).

Minor arterials have a higher degree of access and provide an interconnection between major arterials and collectors. Trip length will be shorter and at a lower level of service than major arterials. Minor arterials typically are not wider than four lanes (with turn lanes).

Collector roads serve both mobility and land access within the Gahanna area network. They are an important link between the arterial system and local streets, and provide access to residential and commercial areas. Typically, collectors will have two through lanes (with turn lanes), but this could vary based on traffic volume.

Local roads will not be defined under the Thoroughfare Plan. They are designed to provide direct land access from higher level roadways and should not carry through traffic.

Development of the Roadway Network

The roadway network for the Thoroughfare Plan Update was developed based on extensive evaluation and analysis of the Gahanna area roadway system. This included evaluation of the following:

- Review and evaluation of the 2001 Thoroughfare Plan Update.
- Review and evaluation of the existing roadways and intersections within the City.
- Review of the City's zoning plans and major planned developments.
- Development of proposed design year volumes and future roadway system operations.
- Determination of the characteristics of the proposed Thoroughfare Plan Update.

Proposed Gahanna Thoroughfare Plan

The proposed Gahanna Thoroughfare Plan network is shown in Figure 12. The following are highlights of the Thoroughfare Plan:

- The roadway system is defined by hierarchy based on the roadway classification. This includes Interstates/Freeways, Major Arterials, Minor Arterials and Collectors. Neighborhood and local roadways are not identified in the plan.
- The classification system of neighboring communities was reviewed. The classification of connecting roadways was coordinated.
- The Major Arterials (Hamilton Road, Granville/Havens Corners and Morse Road) serve as direct links to the interstate system. They also provide connectivity within the City and neighboring communities.

The details of the Thoroughfare Plan roadways system are shown in Table 6. The table provides a detailed summary of the functional classification, estimated average daily traffic, number of lanes and existing right-of-way. This information was evaluated for the design year and recommendations are included under the columns for design year number of lanes and right-of-way.

Additional details are included in Appendix C. This includes proposed typical sections by roadway classification and number of lanes. The typical sections also show recommendations for placement of multi-use paths and sidewalks.
